LinkUp Voted as Top Publicly Recommended Career Site

Minneapolis, MN – LinkUp, the job search engine, was named one of the top 10 career sites in The U.S. by the Department of Labor’s Tools for America’s Job Seeker Challenge. The eight-week challenge involved a screening process and allowed members of the public to nominate and vote for their favorite career sites.

According to the Department of Labor (DOL), over 16,000 users participated in the challenge, reviewing and recommending over 600 job search and career advancement tools. Government agencies, private companies, nonprofit organizations and many others entered their sites in the challenge. The full list of all entries can be accessed through the DOL: <http://www.dol.gov/challenge>.

“LinkUp’s mission is to deliver the best job site on the web for both job seekers and employers, and we’re extremely pleased that our unique approach of indexing only those jobs that are found on company websites has been recognized by job seekers and the Department of Labor,” said LinkUp’s CEO and President Toby Dayton.

LinkUp’s job search engine indexes job listings from over 22,000 company websites and updates those job listings every night. As a result, the jobs listed on LinkUp are always current. And because the jobs are indexed exclusively from company websites, they are often unadvertised anywhere else on the web and do not contain any fake postings, job scams, or listings from recruiters, headhunters, or staffing firms.

LinkUp – always current, often unadvertised, never fake.
